This year it is expected that 40 million poppies will be sold as part of the Royal British Legion's Poppy Appeal. But why do we use the poppy to commemorate those who have served in our armed forces?

Poppies would not normally thrive in the untilled soil of northern France. But the time of the Great War was not a normal time. The artillery barrages of both sides ploughed and churned up no-man's land and the explosions of ordinance helped spread the poppy seeds around the mud churned land. The nitrogen of the explosives created a uniquely fertile environment for these poppies to blossom and bloom. Even in the hell on earth that was the no-man's-land of the Great War, a simple, red flower defied the odds and thrived. Beauty came out of tragedy.

We continue to live in turbulent and uncertain times, and it is often difficult see how there could be real beauty, or even any real peace in our world against the backdrop of violence and conflict. But, in the same way as the poppy pushed its way through the mud of the battlefield, out of the agony of a death on the cross, Jesus was able to bring about the same hope that the poppy symbolises for us at this time of year.

It can be difficult for us to see hope in the no man's land of our current world but the assurance that we have in Jesus is not an assurance of protection or tranquilly, but just a total dependence upon the faithfulness of God.
